A Message from the Director

Charvonne Carlson, NST, CM, CH

Hello All,

Spring is upon us here in the North Western Hemisphere. Some are experiencing the warmth of the Sun being closer to the Earth and others are being kept busy with snowstorms and melts immediately after. Spring is promising a glorious and unpredictable arrival. With that April is also Arab American Heritage month. Here at Church of Peace we strive to recognize all of life's diversity. Please take the time to learn more about Arab Americans, their contributions and culture. Our rich tapestry offers many opportunities to honor our uniqueness while also recognizing our spiritual connection in oneness.

We have started a new article, Ask A Medium. Please feel free to submit a question you would like a medium to answer. Both the medium and you can remain anonymous. We will submit the answers in future issues of our newsletter.

Sending Much Love and Joy to you ALL.

Many Blessings,

Charvonne

Spiritualism in Arab Culture

Arab spiritualism is a complex and multifaceted phenomenon that encompasses a variety of religious, cultural, and philosophical traditions across the Arab world. It is difficult to make generalizations about Arab spiritualism, as beliefs and practices vary widely depending on region, culture, and individual interpretation.

"For Wagdy and Jawhari, Spiritualism offered one way to reconcile Islam and modern science. It also allowed them to carve out a place for Islamic traditions in the ever-developing study of Spiritualism, showing that they were a legitimate part of this global conversation, which was important for many of these early Spiritualists."

-Raphael Cormack

at Spiritualism Experiences its Heyday in the 20th Century Egypt

However, there are Arab spiritual traditions that involve beliefs in psychics, healers, and mediumship. For example, certain forms of Sufism, which is a mystical branch of Islam that emphasizes direct experience of the divine, may involve practices such as seeking guidance from spiritual masters, seeking healing from saints and healers, and engaging in forms of ecstatic worship that involve trance-like states (Ernst, 2013).

Similarly, traditional folk practices in many Arab countries may involve belief in various forms of psychic and spiritual phenomena. For example, in Morocco, there is a long-standing tradition of "baraka" or spiritual power believed to be passed down through certain families and individuals, and which is thought to confer abilities such as healing and clairvoyance (De Smet & Debeche, 2011). Similarly, in Egypt and other parts of the Arab world, there are traditional healers known as "sheikhs" who are believed to have special spiritual powers that enable them to heal physical and mental illnesses (Ghalioungui, 1980).

As beliefs in mediumship and psychic abilities vary widely across the Arab world and are often a matter of belief. However, there are individuals in the Arab world today who claim to have psychic or mediumistic abilities.

For example, in Egypt, there are individuals known as "raqis" or spiritual healers who are believed to have the ability to communicate with spirits and provide guidance and healing to individuals experiencing spiritual or psychological distress (El-Shamy, 2013). Similarly, in some regions of Morocco, there are individuals known as "amel" who are believed to have the ability to communicate with jinn (spirits) and provide protection and healing to those who seek their assistance (De Smet & Debeche, 2011).

Raphael Cormack's (2022) article Spiritualism Experiences its Heyday in the 20th Century Egypt, discussed Egypt's most well-known Spiritualist, Abu al-Khair and his Spiritualist magazine Alam-al-Ruh (The Spirit World) that introduced the Middle East to the phenomena and research on Spirit after World War II. Using the terms of Jinn, Abu al-Khair, translated the British Spiritualists work of Oliver Lodge and Arthur Findlay, and educated others about the tenets of spirit communication and the science of life after death. Also Mohammed Farid Wagdy was the first science scholar of Spiritualism who wrote about seances and practitioners of Spiritual healing. Sheik Tantawi Jawhari wrote about Spiritualism in the Quran in his 1919 book Al-Arwah (The Spirits). Unfortunately, unlike the Western Spiritualists in America and Britain, Middle Eastern Spiritualism as taught by Jawhari and Wagdy, did not offer a place for women. Note, however, that not all Arabs or Arab spiritual traditions believe in or practice psychic abilities, healers, or mediumship.

Sheik Tantawi Jawhari, the "Father of Arabic Spiritualism"

By A. M. Gunshore

Sheik Tantawi Jawhari was born in 1862 in Egypt and was educated in al-Azhar, an Islamic institution where he became a religious scholar. By the 1900s, Jawhari believed Islam and science could coexist. The 1910, Halley's comet led to a spiritual awakening when Jawhari experienced a phenomena. He claimed he was visited by extraterrestrial spirits. He published a book about his experience traveling with the group to a new place where he was given guidance on how to direct humans away from materialism and to strive for world peace. His book of this experience was called "Where is the Humanity?" -

Sheik Tantawi Jawhari

al-Arwah "the Spirits"

By the end of World War I, Jawhari was introduced to British Spiritualism. His belief in the spirit world and his desire to learn more, led him to study the principles and science of this philosophy. Because Spiritualism was not considered a religion but a philosophy with scientific evidence of the spirit world, Jawhari hoped he could blend the principles with his Islamic religion. In 1919, he would publish his landmark book al-Arwah "the Spirits". Islam believes in life after death for the soul, this belief led Jawhari to publicly teach about Spiritualism with its scientific evidence of the spirit communication. Some Arab groups by the 1930s would accept Spiritualism.

Soon in Cairo, Jawhari conducted Spiritualist circles and seances. His group experimented with automatic writing and channeling of spirits. One documented channel was from the Caliph Harun al-Rashid who asked Jawhari to write a book that would rebuttal another's claims about Caliph's family. Jawhari finished the book by 1936. This book would help launch Jawhari as a scientific religious scholar. Jawhari would transition in 1940 but his communications and teachings about Spiritualism lived on through his own spirit communicating to others in Spiritualist circles and seances from the 1940s to 1960s.

Church of Peace: Psychical Research Science Society

In following Spiritualism, Church of Peace started a Psychical Research Science Society. Our goal is to shed light on the current studies, scientific findings, technology and groups that have proven the existence of life after physical death.

Starting in 2023, we will offer speakers throughout the year for a fee. Due to changing our format, the current membership will be suspended after June, to make the society open to all who are interested in attending the events, webinars and trainings. Struggle for Women's Rights in the Middle East

Still in 2023, women in the Middle East continue to lead protests against the patriarchal systems that govern their lives. These protests are not new, but they have gained new momentum in recent years as women refuse to accept the status quo and demand change.

The death of Iranian woman Jina Mahsa Amini in 2022 sparked widespread outrage and renewed calls for justice and equality. The Tehran morality police claimed Amini was killed by her husband, who had a history of domestic violence, but the media uncovered how she died in police custody after being beaten and arrested for improper wear of her headscarf. Her death highlighted the pervasive issue of gender-based violence in Iran and the urgent need for systemic change.

In response, women in Iran and across the Middle East have taken to the streets to demand an end to violence against women and greater protections for survivors of domestic violence. These protests have been met with harsh crackdowns by security forces, with reports of arrests, beatings, and even killings.

Despite the risks, women continue to organize and speak out, using social media and other platforms to amplify their voices and call for change. Hashtags like #MeTooIran and #IranianWomenFightBack have become rallying cries for women's rights activists, helping to build solidarity and support for their cause.

These protests are part of a larger movement for women's rights in the Middle East. In recent years, women have been at the forefront of movements for political and social change across the region. In Sudan, women played a leading role in the protests that eventually led to the ousting of former President Omar al-Bashir. In Lebanon, women have been at the forefront of protests against corruption and economic inequality.

The fight for women's rights in the Middle East is far from over, but there are signs of progress. In Saudi Arabia, women were granted the right to drive in 2018, and the government has announced plans to allow women to travel abroad without a male guardian's permission. In Iran, women are pushing back against mandatory hijab laws, with many refusing to wear the veil and facing arrest and imprisonment as a result.

However, much work remains to be done. Women in the Middle East continue to face discrimination and violence, and their rights are often limited by laws and cultural norms that reinforce patriarchal power structures. But by continuing to organize and speak out, women in the Middle East are showing that change is possible.

In conclusion, the protests of women in the Middle East in 2023 are a testament to their resilience and determination in the face of adversity. These protests are part of a larger movement for women's rights in the region, and they serve as a powerful reminder that change is possible when women come together to demand it.
